

RSV Vaccine for people over 60

What is RSV?

RSV (respiratory syncytial) is a common virus that has cold-like symptoms. Most people get better in a week or two, but RSV can be serious for people 60 and older.

What is the RSV vaccine?

The RSV vaccine is a single shot in your upper arm that will protect you against RSV.

Who should get the RSV vaccine?

- People 60 years old and older.
- People who have weakened immune systems.

If you fall into one, or both, of these groups you should this vaccine.

When should I get the vaccine?

RSV spreads the most during the fall or winter, so you should get the RSV vaccine between September and January. One shot will protect you for 2 winter seasons.

Where can I get the vaccine?

Walgreens, CVS, and Rite Aid all offer the RSV vaccine to people who are 60 and older. You can walk in or make an appointment online.

Scan to learn more

212.545.2400

chnyc.org